WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 5.

EXECUTING BOGG, THE WINTER GOD .- An English traveler writes thus :- A curious cercmony is performed every year in Zurich, Switz erland, on the eve of the so called Sechselauten, the ancient spring festival of the Tigurines, as our forefathers often classically named the people of Zurich. The Sechselauten now serves as a sort of Protestant carnival for the mass of the population, while the old city guilds figure in it much as our city companies do in the Lord Mayor's show. The principal group in this year's procession was a satirical composi-tion representing the last novel reform for which the handful of Social Democrats in the city of Zwingli have been agitating during the past Winter, "the monopoly of the corn trade by the State."

the eve rather than to the festival itself. This is the solemn condemnation and execution of the hated winter. It seems to be a theory of the Sechselauten that Winter ought to end on the 31st day of March, and that Spring should begin on the 1st of April. After sucset on the last day of March, multitudes of men, women and children collect together on the Stadthauspla z. in order to witness the burning of the unlucky "Bogg." The hard, cold winter god is supposed to be incarnate in this Tigurine Guy Fawkes of the name of Bogg, and there is the most jubilant exultation over this curious auto da fe—a survival of old German Paganism which the iconoclasm of Zwingli and Bullin ger left untouched.

During the burning of the winter god this year, the crown of the neighboring Uethberg was white with snow, a sign that the hard Zuric's winter was not over, so that the experiment with the Bogg was a little daring and venturesome. The execution of the Begg has occasionally been put off until a later and less wintry day in April. This was the case last year. Yet, when the citizens arose next moruing, the Bogg seemed, like phonix, to have risen from his ashes and declared that his reigo was not ended, for the city and the whole neighborhood were the appearance of a winter landscape, every street and field being white with spow.
